MISLEADING GOOGLE-STYLE PRESENTATION AND SUPPORT WARNING · SEARCH AND BROWSER UTILITIES

Google Search’s name. Google’s colours. A different seller.

This app uses Google’s name and colours, but Google did not publish it. Its support website is broken. Public website links, the same advertising account number and the same support email connect it to two other Apple developer accounts and MACFANR on Google Play. Other apps on those linked accounts also use familiar brands or content.

VISUAL EVIDENCE

It looks Google-related. It comes from a different developer.

Left: the independent Search App uses a magnifying glass in Google-like colours. Right: Google’s own app uses a G. The name and colours can make buyers think the independent app comes from Google, even though the drawings are different.

How the three Apple developer accounts are linked.

Search App is listed by 余 张 / yu zhang, not Google. This Apple developer account lists 27 apps and uses the ZY Soft name in its copyright and policies.

The app's website and MACFANR's website list the same Google advertising account number. MACFANR's Android app links back to the same website. JobWorth and ClashX, on the first Apple account, also link MACFANR.

MACFANR's website links to Remote for Roku on the second Apple account. The third account also links these websites and uses the same support email as MACFANR. These are links readers can check. They do not prove that one person owns all three accounts.

We checked all 53 apps on the two linked accounts. Below, we show the strongest branding concerns, questions about branded paid content, and apps that simply describe services they work with.

Account connection graph. All three profiles are China-associated based on the labelled business trail. Original app icons and exact Apple publisher IDs identify distinct profiles; website/support links do not establish common legal ownership or verified nationality. E4/E7/E9/E11–E23/E36–E37.

What we found in the other accounts.

We checked the names, icons, descriptions and all 156 store images for the 53 apps on the other two accounts. All 53 app pages eventually opened; one temporary access error cleared on retry.

Browser App and UniSearcher are the clearest extra Google-branding concerns. Couple Game uses another game’s name inside a paid feature. The AutoCAD tutorial’s description matches a LinkedIn Learning course. These last two cases need a check of the developer’s permission to use that material.

We did not install the apps, make purchases or see private licences. The table says what we found, rather than calling every app on a linked account a scam.

The Google name and colours create the first impression.

The title is Search App for Google Search ®. Its magnifying glass uses Google's red, yellow, green and blue, arranged around a ring with a blue handle. The current official Google app uses a gradient G. The shapes differ: this is an imitation of Google's visual identity, not a exact copy of the current app icon.

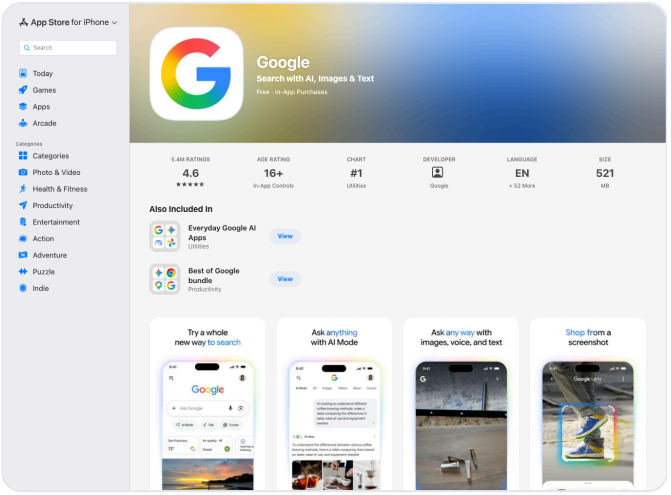

Putting Google Search prominently in the product name, adding the registration symbol and using Google-like colours can make an independent utility look like an official Google product. App Scam DB assesses the combined presentation as misleading. The description does describe a multi-engine utility, which is material context, but does not explain the independent seller as clearly as the title promotes Google.

The screenshots show Google inside an engine selector and an embedded Google results page, alongside Bing, DuckDuckGo and other services. Showing a service that the app can open is different from being that service's official publisher. The registered-trademark symbol does not show that Google licensed or endorsed this app.

The checked US iPhone record has one rating with a 5.0 average; the Mac view has no ratings overview. No inspected review explicitly reports mistaking this app for Google, so the warning rests on the observed presentation rather than a claimed victim account.

Actual US Mac App Store page, 17 November 2026. The Google-led name, coloured magnifier and independent developer appear together. The category position shown is a dated snapshot, not a download estimate. E3.

Actual official Google listing: seller Google LLC and the current gradient G icon. This mobile-app reference establishes the brand/publisher difference; it is not labelled as a Google Search Mac app. E24/E25.

The Mac and iPhone versions look slightly different.

This product is sold for iPhone, iPad and Mac under app ID 6670414441. The current iPhone record is version 1.0.5; the Mac page is version 1.0.4. The icons also have separate Apple-hosted artwork: the Mac version adds shading and a rounded white tile.

The iPhone release record starts on 15 April 2026; the Mac history shown on the current page starts on 5 May. Those dates and platform differences are preserved separately. They are not evidence of an account transfer or a brand change after review.

The support website is broken. Its advertising file still works.

The Developer Website link on Apple's page opens a GitHub 404 error: there is no working homepage at that address. A buyer looking for product information or support reaches a missing page.

A small public file called app-ads.txt still works on that website. It tells advertising companies which account may sell ads for an app. The app's website and macfanr.com list the exact same Google advertising account number: pub-1695322534702003.

That links their advertising records. It does not show that Search App itself displays ads, tracks users or earns advertising revenue. Some older apps on the first Apple account use a different website with a different advertising number.

The app's privacy-policy page does work and explains local storage, payments and online searches. The specific support problem is the missing app homepage. Using a hosted website alone does not prove a scam.

The same websites and support email connect the accounts.

Two products on the primary profile, JobWorth and ClashX Pro - Server Manager, link macfanr.com in Apple's records. MACFANR's site in turn promotes Remote for Roku, whose exact Apple record belongs to Apple developer ID 430581126. That is the first separate-profile bridge.

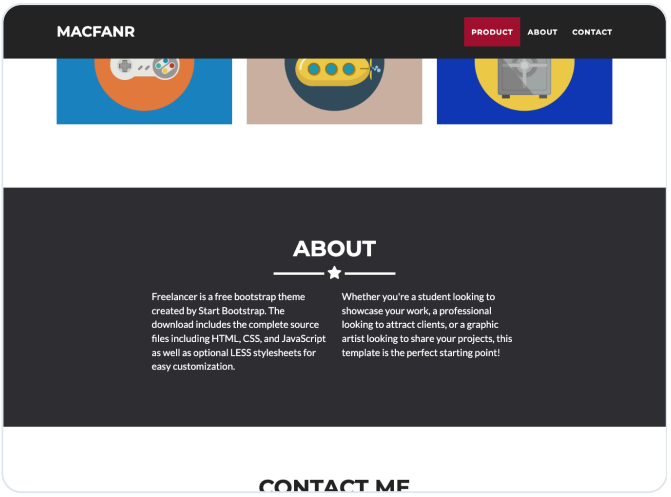

The Android product Catch your cheating spouse links the same GitHub homepage as Search App and the MACFANR privacy page. Its Google Play business panel names 许君 and declares Chengdu, Sichuan, China. The current MACFANR Play catalog has three products, whose package IDs are listed below.

Countdown widget on Apple Apple developer account 430581126 and iTyper on Apple Apple developer account 1106797959 print the same support mailbox that Google Play displays for MACFANR. The latter profile also includes Proxy Master and Store Switch X, whose Apple records link the GitHub domain. This supports shared websites and support details beyond a similar personal name.

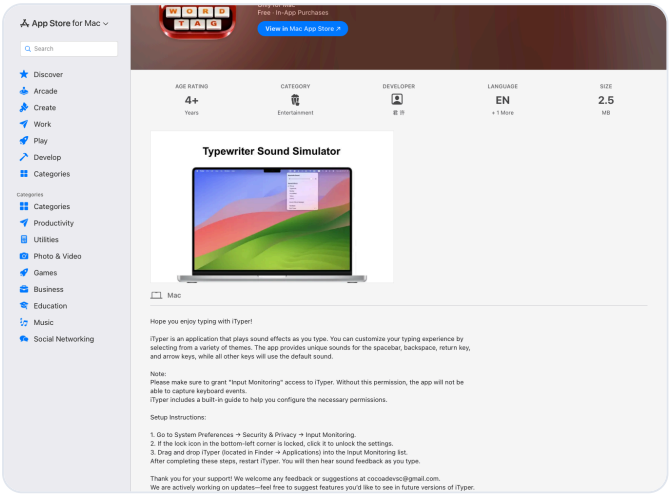

MACFANR's website still contains stock Freelancer template text and placeholder projects. It presents a China contact location but does not identify a verified incorporated company, registration number or ownership structure. The checked domain registry record dates macfanr.com to July 2015 without establishing the primary app seller as its legal owner.

E7/E14–E23/E35.

Why all three accounts have a China link.

All three Apple accounts have a documented China link. This is based on public business records and website/support links, not guesses from the developers' names. ZY Soft's terms give Chengdu, China. MACFANR's website and its Google Play business details also give Chengdu, China.

The evidence is different for each account. The first uses ZY Soft policies and links MACFANR. The second is linked by MACFANR's Roku product page and the same support email. The third uses the same websites and support email. The table below shows those links.

The country chart records China as a business association. It does not confirm nationality, one owner, or a registered Chinese address for every Apple account. Apple gives no trader address for the main seller, and the policy journal's own profile says Singapore. Those details are kept separate.

ZY Soft publisher-wide terms give a Chengdu, Sichuan, China contact location. These terms are linked by portfolio apps; they are distinguished from the exact Search App privacy link and Apple's absent trader address. E5/E6/E9.

Country association by Apple publisher profile

Apple publisher profile	Association	Documented basis
余 张 / yu zhang · 1544645313	China-associated	ZY Soft publisher-wide terms give Chengdu, China; exact same-profile JobWorth/Clash products link MACFANR. The exact primary Apple seller has no trader-country disclosure.
君 许 · 430581126	China-associated	MACFANR site names Chengdu and links the exact Roku app; Countdown uses the same support mailbox as MACFANR Google Play, whose business panel declares Chengdu, China. Apple registered location not independently verified.

What happens when you search.

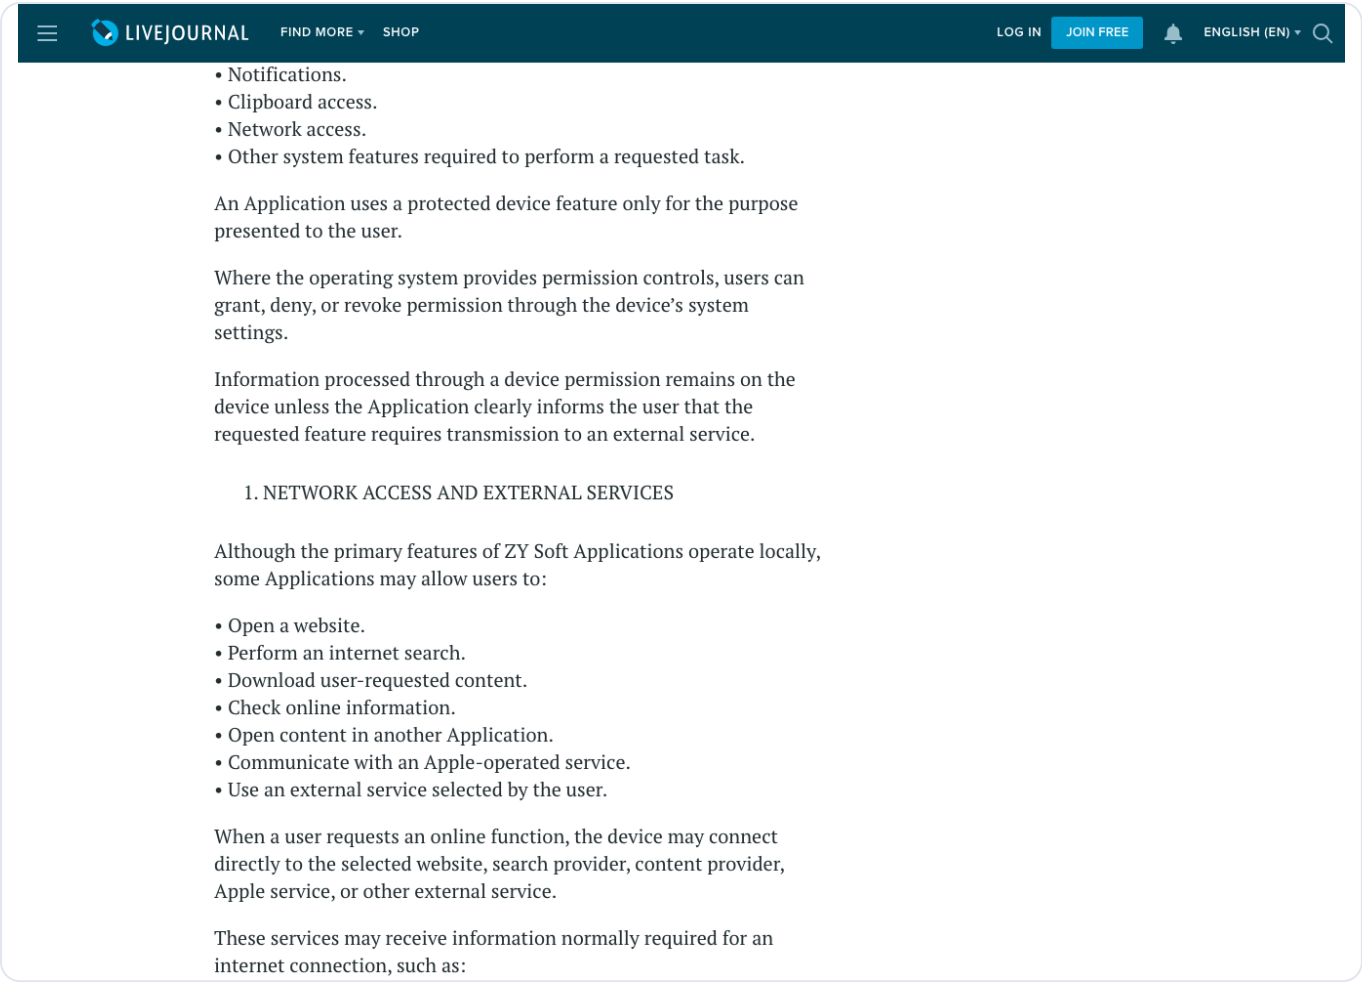

Apple shows Data Not Collected. The linked policy says the publisher normally operates no backend receiving local app data, and no tracking or analytics service for these utilities. It describes history, saved items, cookies and settings as local information.

The same policy says that using an online feature can send a request directly to the chosen search provider or website. That service may receive the search terms, IP address, requested URL, browser information and its own cookies. This is compatible with the developer saying it does not itself collect the data; it does not mean every search stays offline.

The iPhone release notes advertise a private mode that leaves no history or browsing traces. That local-history statement does not establish anonymity from the search provider. No app was installed and no network traffic or private-mode behavior was measured.

Editorial explanation based on the app-linked privacy policy and release notes. Declared local storage and external search requests are separate. This is not a traffic-capture result. E2/E4/E8.

Actual linked policy: Network Access and External Services explains direct connections to websites and search providers. E8.

E2/E4/E8.

The paid utility is separate from Google Search.

The US listing offers Monthly $1.99, Yearly $3.99 and Lifetime $4.99. Ireland lists €1.99, €3.99 and €5.99 respectively. These are the independent utility's offers. They do not purchase an official Google subscription, and a paid search organizer is not inherently fraudulent.

At unchanged prices, continuous monthly renewal has an estimated yearly cost of $23.88 or €23.88, compared with the separately listed $3.99/€3.99 yearly plan. Exact paid features, purchase screens, a trial and completed charges were not tested.

The publisher-wide terms used by other apps define Lifetime as the product's supported commercial lifetime. Search App's checked description does not link that terms URL, so the report does not assume an identical in-app contract or feature entitlement was shown to its buyers. The policy does explain Apple billing, restoration and cancellation; deleting an app does not cancel a subscription.

E1 pages 2/3; E2/E3/E6/E8/E9.

Browser App borrows Google’s colours to sell a different utility.

Browser App for All Browser, app 6752710976, uses a shaded circular icon divided into Google-like red, yellow, green and blue areas. Its description starts with Browser App for Chrome & Edge, and its promotions prominently display Chrome alongside other browsers. Together these elements can suggest a Google browser identity before the buyer understands that the app is a separate link-routing utility.

Chrome’s official icon has a blue centre with a red/green/yellow surround. Browser App has a white centre and different segments. This is an editorial warning about the combination of familiar colours and Chrome wording; the icon files are not identical.

The description explains link routing, browser selection and installation shortcuts. It also explicitly says the browser icons are used to describe functions and disclaims affiliation with Apple/Google. That disclosure is relevant, but does not make the first-impression branding disappear. A utility that sends links to Chrome is not itself Google Chrome.

Apple lists Upgrade to Pro at $2.99, a $1.99 monthly offer and a $5.99 yearly offer. The visible complaint concerns quitting/deleting a menu-bar process, and the developer provides quit instructions; it is not cited as a wrong-product purchase report.

The original promotion advertises opening links and switching the default browser. It displays Chrome and other browser logos above a browser-picker interface. This supports the description of a browser-management utility; it does not establish Google authorship or a Chrome extension.

UniSearcher also uses Google Search’s name and colours.

UniSearcher for Google Search, app 6761401700, belongs to Apple developer account 1106797959. Its shaded S uses red, yellow, green and blue while the product title leads with Google Search. Google LLC’s official app uses a G and a different publisher. The combined name/palette deserves review as a Google-style identity; this is not an identical-icon finding.

The original promotion shows a multi-engine search selector and the description describes launching results in a chosen browser. This is an independent search utility, not proof of a Google partnership. Apple lists an Upgrade to Pro purchase at $1.99. Couple Game sells a mode using another game’s identity.

Couple Game - Games for Lovers, app 6754831301 on Apple developer account 1106797959, explicitly names We’re Not Really Strangers in its description. Its promotional image repeats the name above a burgundy question card and identifies a Couples Edition at the bottom. This is a named brand presented inside a marketed feature, rather than a reference to a browser the app can open.

The brand’s own site sells its card game and describes 150 cards with three levels. The app also advertises 150 cards and three named levels. Apple separately lists a We’re Not Strangers Pack purchase for $0.99, making the branding relevant to a paid feature.

The visible name/card presentation warrants a permission and source check. The full deck was not compared and no licence was recovered, so this report does not claim that every question was copied or that the game mechanics alone prove copyright infringement.

The AutoCAD tutorial has a concrete course-description match.

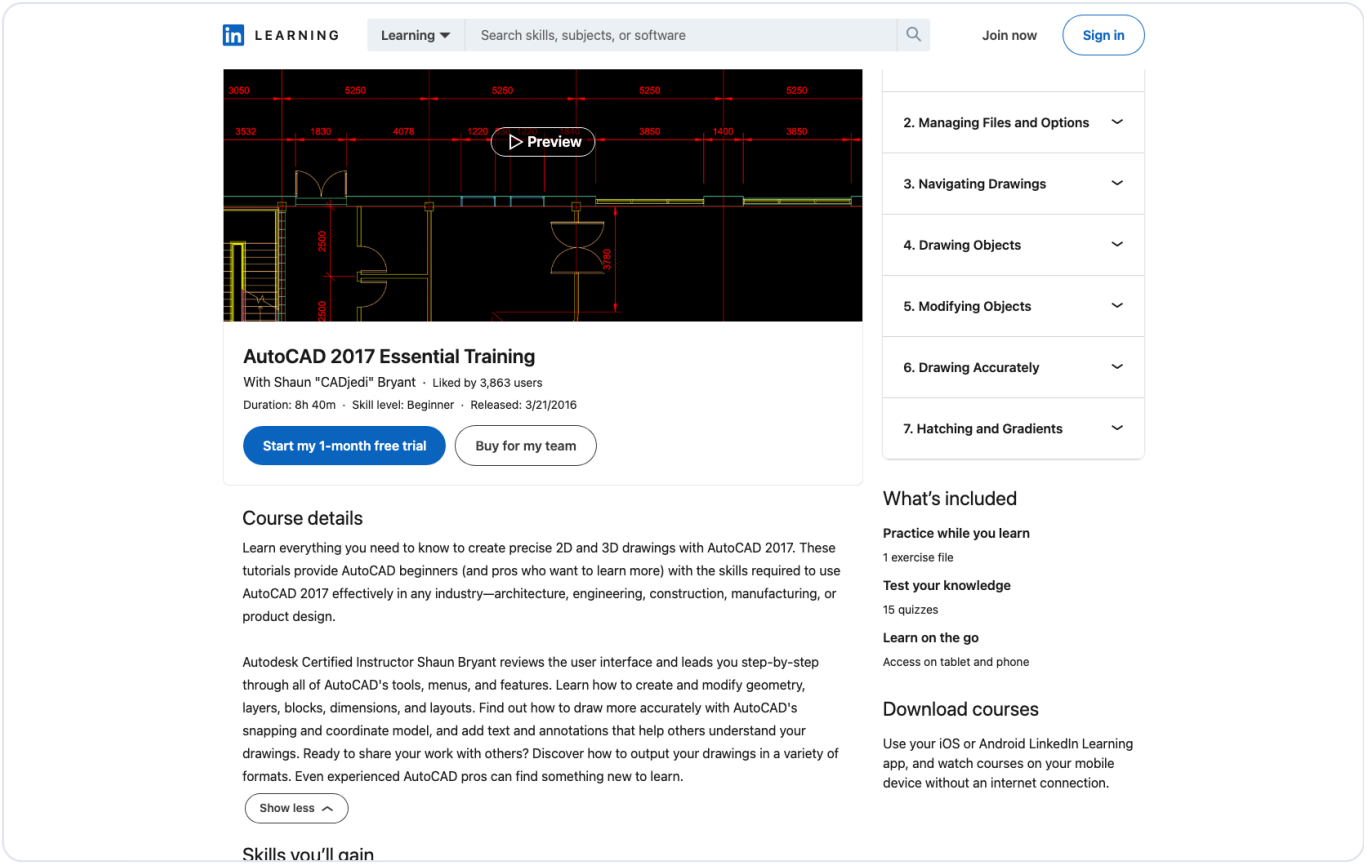

Essential Training for AutoCAD 2017, app 1181778777, is sold for $6.99 by Apple developer account 1106797959. Its first two descriptive paragraphs match LinkedIn Learning's AutoCAD 2017 course introduction, including the named instructor Shaun Bryant. The official course gives a 21 March 2016 release date. This is more specific than two apps merely mentioning the same software.

The app's original promotion shows a video player with an ordered lesson list. It is a paid training package, not Autodesk's AutoCAD design application. The matching description establishes a concrete lead about where the content came from; it does not establish who licensed the training videos. No video was downloaded or compared.

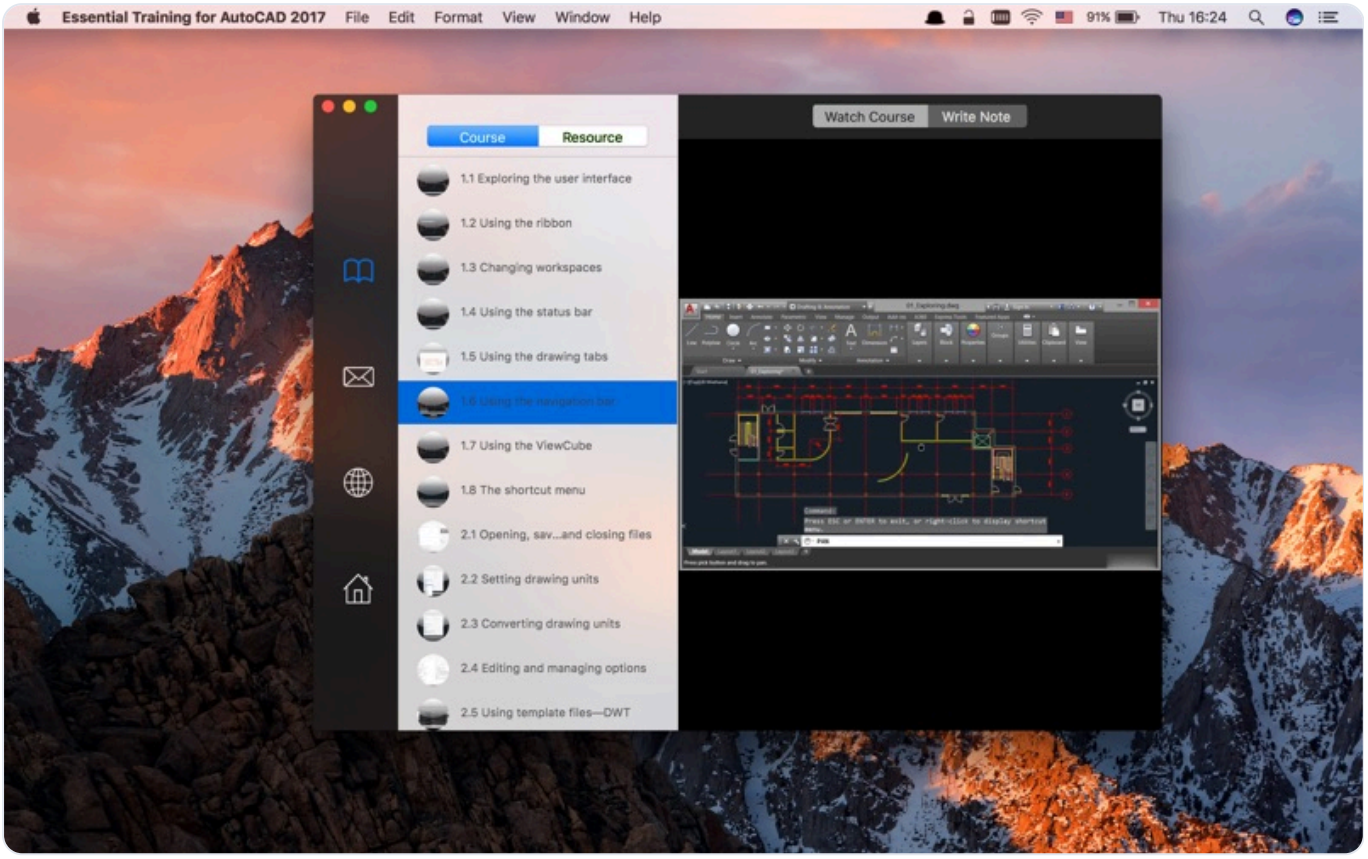

The same profile sells Essential Training for Photoshop CC 2017, app 1174326931, for $6.99, with a similar tutorial-player presentation. The checked historical course URL now leads to a 2021 edition, so that current page does not prove a match to the app's 2017 video content. Both training products merit a licensing review without inventing an unlicensed-distribution finding.

Everything Ultra: a similar name, but copying is not proven.

Everything Ultra, app 6792703569, is another product on Apple developer account 1106797959. Apple lists a $3.99 price and describes instant file search on Mac. Its store icon is an orange/red magnifier; its current promotion uses a blue search symbol. Official voidtools Everything is a Windows file-search product with its own orange magnifier identity.

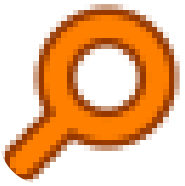

The shared word and type of tool make this worth checking, but Everything is also a descriptive word and a magnifying glass is a common search symbol. The checked listing does not claim to be voidtools, and these observations do not establish copying or a shared publisher. This lead is therefore recorded at lower confidence than the Google-name/colour examples.

An app can mention a service that it works with.

Remote for Roku and Remote for Chromecast, on Apple developer account 430581126, describe controlling compatible devices and casting local files over the same network. Their icons depict remotes/wireless control; the official Roku and Google Home icons are visibly different. A supported device name and a familiar colour are not enough to call those icons identical copies.

PanTunes markets a Pandora client and prominently uses the Pandora name in its promotion, but its description explicitly identifies a third-party app and disclaims affiliation/endorsement. Its red note icon differs from Pandora's official P. The actual service integration and any licence were not tested.

Chat Bots says users must bring their own AI-provider API keys or local models, and excludes bundled provider credits. AI Chat Hub calls itself independent and disclaims affiliation with the services it opens. Their provider references and service-selector logos are therefore recorded as functional/marketing references, rather than automatically treated as stolen app identities.

Screen Brush Ultra and the separate ScreenBrush app share descriptive words, but Apple dates the reviewed app to January 2014 and the comparator to August 2017. Without dated earlier artwork or content evidence, that name overlap does not establish that the older listing copied the newer one.

The specific branding rules this presentation raises.

Google's public guidance restricts putting its trademarks into another product's name, imitating its distinctive visual identity and implying a relationship that does not exist. The observed Google Search title and four-colour magnifier are the specific combination requiring review; they are more than a neutral statement that one search provider is supported.

The app is a separate publisher's multi-search organizer. A genuine feature that opens Google results would not establish Google sponsorship or permission to market an independent app with a Google-like identity. A generic non-affiliation clause appears in the publisher-wide terms; that does not change who Apple identifies as the seller.

Apple's relevant review areas include accurate marketing and metadata, copycat presentation, intellectual property and clear privacy/purchase information. This report makes an editorial misleading-presentation assessment. No Google licence record, adjudicated infringement, Apple fraud decision or confirmed developer suspension was recovered.

Publisher 430581126: 35 product-by-product branding checks.

Every returned product below was screened using its current name, icon, description and promotional images. A row with no specific copy identified is not a legal clearance or a claim that the app was tested. Compatibility claims and unresolved content permissions remain separate from the stronger Google-style branding findings.

CHECK THE SOURCES

The records behind this report.

Authored investigation followed by all 13 pages of the supplied analysis. Original app icons, all six Mac, six iPhone and five iPad promotions, native page captures and labelled editorial diagrams. Source appendix and some original business-panel captures contain visible contact details. No app, APK or executable was downloaded or installed; no purchase, support message or search submission was made. Expanded linked-profile screen: all 53 apps and 156 promotional images reviewed; selected additional originals and official references are reproduced. The account graph distinguishes exact profile membership from website/support associations.

E8 / Current policy actually linked by Search App

Privacy Policy for ZY Soft Applications, effective 2 September 2026, hosted on zysoft1994.livejournal.com/716.html. Says local utilities normally have no publisher backend, tracking or analytics, but external search/web services can receive search terms, IP address, requested URLs, cookies and browser request information. These are published disclosures, not measured implementation. Checked 17 November 2026 (HTTP 200).

E20 / Shared business support contact across stores

Countdown widget, Apple app 506996014, under publisher 430581126, prints cocoadevsc@gmail.com in its support text. The same mailbox is displayed by MACFANR on Google Play. This corroborates a shared contact channel; it does not by itself prove who owns either account. Checked 17 November 2026 (HTTP 200).

E29 / Verified US archive replay, same-day source

17 November 2026 06:18:06 UTC capture loaded and preserves the current Google Search title, independent seller, multi-engine description and current purchases. It is a same-day record, not an earlier launch appearance. Checked 17 November 2026 (HTTP 200).

Prefix query found a 26 September 2026 01:09:00 UTC US URL with Arabic language query. Replay returned 429. Exact/query-free/DE/IE/Mac/legacy URL attempts are retained privately. E32 / Profile location and limits of business identification

The policy account zysoft1994 publicly lists Singapore as its profile location. That is a self-entered journal field, not a company registry entry. ZY Soft terms give China contact/jurisdiction; MACFANR/Google Play give China locations. Apple's exact primary provider has no country disclosure, so these records are distinguished. E33 / Older GitHub domain on the same primary Apple profile

Some apps under developer 1544645313 link ekin0311.github.io. Its homepage also returns 404, while its app-ads.txt declares a DIFFERENT advertising publisher ID, pub-4742583633406165. Relevant provisions: 2.3 accurate metadata, 2.3.7 names/keywords, 4.1 copycats, 5.2.1 intellectual property, 5.1.1 privacy disclosures and 3.1.2 subscriptions. MACFANR domain registered 10 July 2015, current expiry 10 July 2028. Public registry response supplies no verified business owner identifying the primary Apple seller. Domain age and hosting are not used as residence, corporate ownership or fraud evidence. Checked 17 November 2026 (HTTP 200).

E36 / Branding screen of both linked publisher catalogs

All 35 records under 430581126 and all 18 under 1106797959 were screened: names, original icons, descriptions and all 156 current promotional images, including platform variants. All 53 exact Apple pages eventually loaded; New File Free initially returned 429 and then loaded on retry. The per-product review is a presentation screen, not a legal clearance, runtime test or accusation against every app.

E37 / Browser App: Google-colour identity, browser icons and independence disclaimer

App 6752710976, publisher 1106797959, uses a shaded four-colour ring and a description headed Browser App for Chrome & Edge. Promotions display original browser logos, link routing and browser selection. Description disclaims affiliation with Apple/Google. Purchases: Upgrade to Pro $2.99, monthly $1.99, yearly $5.99. A visible complaint concerns quitting/deletion, with a developer response explaining the menu-bar process; it is not a wrong-product purchase account.

E38 / Official Google Chrome icon and publisher reference

Exact Apple app 535886823 is Google Chrome, Google LLC. Original mobile-app icon is a brand reference, not a claim that this is a Mac App Store Chrome package. Browser App's white-centred segmented ring differs from Chrome's blue centre and red/green/yellow surround.

E39 / UniSearcher: Google-named utility on the same linked profile

App 6761401700, publisher 1106797959. Original coloured S icon and engine-selector promotion retained; Google Search is in the title. The utility describes sending searches to different browsers/engines, not publication by Google. Upgrade to Pro listed at $1.99. Current branding concern is the combination of name/palette, not an identical G icon.

E40 / Everything Ultra: name overlap with a file-search product

App 6792703569, publisher 1106797959, $3.99. Original icon is a red/orange magnifier; one promotion uses a blue search symbol. Describes instant local-file search on Mac. No claim of being voidtools was found in the checked listing; a shared descriptive word and magnifying glass are insufficient alone to establish copying.

E41 / Official voidtools Everything reference

Official FAQ describes Everything as a Windows file-name search utility; official site and original favicon retained. It is a different publisher from the Mac listing. No voidtools licence or affiliation statement linking this Mac seller was recovered; this is a lower-confidence identity-overlap lead, not a proven infringement.

E42 / Official Roku app and original comparison icon

Exact official reference 482066631, Roku Remote (Official), seller ROKU INC. Original icon compared with the independent Remote for Roku icon. The independent app uses a remote/hand pictogram; the official reference uses the Roku identity. A purple background and compatibility wording alone do not establish an identical-logo copy.

E43 / Remote-control and casting listings on publisher 430581126

Remote for Roku 1308270746 and Remote for Chromecast 1331341023 describe controlling compatible devices over the local network. Both exact current pages loaded and both list $2.99 upfront. Original promotions and separate icons retained. Apple TV/Samsung/LocalCaster/Net Streamer names are also checked as compatibility claims, without treating mention of a supported device as proof of impersonation.

E44 / Official Google Home comparison reference

Exact official Google Home app 680819774, Google LLC. Used to compare the current independent Chromecast remote's blue tile and remote/wireless pictogram with Google's house-shaped Home identity. E45 / PanTunes identifies itself as a third-party Pandora client

App 1374748838, publisher 430581126, uses a red music-note icon and promotes Pandora Radio streaming. The listing explicitly disclaims association, endorsement and affiliation with Pandora. Original official Pandora app 284035177 belongs to Pandora Media, LLC and uses its P identity. These icons differ. Function, licence and subscription interactions were not tested.

E46 / Couple Game reproduces a branded game-mode name and presentation

App 6754831301, publisher 1106797959. Description names We're Not Really Strangers, 150 cards and three named levels. Original promotional image shows that game name, a burgundy card and a Couples Edition footer. Apple lists a $0.99 We're Not Strangers Pack purchase. This verifies third-party branding in a marketed paid feature; authorization and the full card contents were not established.

E47 / Official We're Not Really Strangers brand/product

Brand-owned site sells its card game and describes 150 cards with three levels. Original product page capture shows the brand and its red packaging. E48 / AutoCAD training app and marketed video content

Essential Training for AutoCAD 2017, app 1181778777, publisher 1106797959, $6.99. App description names instructor Shaun Bryant and reproduces the first two descriptive course paragraphs seen on LinkedIn Learning's AutoCAD 2017 page. Original promotion shows a tutorial-video player, not the AutoCAD application being sold by Autodesk. This is a concrete content-source/rights review lead, not proof of unlicensed video distribution.

E49 / LinkedIn Learning's matching AutoCAD course

Official course AutoCAD 2017 Essential Training names Shaun Bryant, gives a 21 March 2016 release and contains the same introductory description as the Apple app. Native source capture retained. No video file was downloaded or compared and no redistribution licence was recovered. The text match does not identify a common owner of the app seller and LinkedIn/Autodesk.

E50 / Photoshop tutorial app on the same profile

Essential Training for Photoshop CC 2017, app 1174326931, publisher 1106797959, $6.99. Original Ps Learning icon and tutorial-player promotion retained. It advertises training rather than Adobe's editing application. Its content licensing is unverified; no identical-video finding is made.

E51 / Photoshop course URL now resolves to a newer edition

The requested 2017 LinkedIn Learning course URL redirects to Photoshop 2021 Essential Training: The Basics. The current page is therefore not used to assert a verified match of the Apple app's 2017 videos. Official Adobe Photoshop app 1457771281 and Autodesk AutoCAD app 393149734 independently identify the branded products' publishers; training titles alone are not impersonation proof.

E52 / Screen Brush name comparison and chronology check

Screen Brush Ultra 794905842 was first released 18 January 2014 in Apple's record. The separately published ScreenBrush 1233965871 by Elena Drozhzhina has an Apple first-release date of 16 August 2017. Generic on-screen annotation features and the shared words do not establish copying; no dated earlier icon or ownership link was recovered.

E53 / Full linked-profile screen: review boundaries and corroborating records

The per-product table records all 53 reviewed apps. Chat Bots explicitly requires users' own provider API keys or local models and excludes bundled AI credits; AI Chat Hub explicitly disclaims affiliation with the accessible AI services. Provider logos in a service selector are not treated alone as copied app identities. Public promotions were visually screened; code, network behavior, purchases and private licensing arrangements were not tested.

Description

Search App helps you search across multiple search engines and social platforms from one fast, focused workspace.

Choose your preferred search engine anytime, including Google, Bing, and DuckDuckGo, or use bang-style shortcuts to instantly search popular websites and social platforms.

Save useful pages as cards, organize them with tags, and revisit important ideas later. Built-in search history keeps recent activity easy to access, while a clean interface helps you stay focused.

Perfect for:
• Multi-search across the web
• Social media search
• Fast research and idea collection
• Everyday browsing and discovery

Features
• Search all major search engines in one app
• Quick switch between search providers
• Bang shortcuts for faster navigation

• Save pages with tags and notes
• Built-in search history
• Clean, distraction-free design

Search faster. Discover more. Stay organized.
